Designer Perspective — Randall Whitehead, IALD

One new company (Recesso Lighting) has created an alternative—a whole line of very attractive trims that turn any recessed fixture (LED, fluorescent or incandescent) into a close-to-ceiling decorative luminaire. I saw them at LIGHTFAIR and was blown away. (Editor's Note: The product received a 2010 LFI Innovation Award). They are not competing with other manufacturers; they are essentially partnering with them. I say turn that hole in the ceiling into architectural jewelry. Any time I can hide a warm-colored, energy-efficient light source behind a lens, shade or architectural detail, the less likely that people will think of it as anything other than incandescent. I call it "stealth green design."

About the Author: Randall Whitehead, IALD, is an internationally known architectural lighting designer based in San Francisco. Mr. Whitehead appears regularly as a guest expert on the Discovery Channel, CNN, HGTV and Martha Stewart Living Radio and has written seven books on lighting design.
